	Institute for Ageing and Health at the University of Newcastle upon Tyne undertakes internationally competitive research in the field of brain ageing and dementia with unparalleled opportunities exist for research into a variety of aspects (social, biological, imaging, neuropathological, neurochemical) of both degenerative dementia and depressive disorders in late life. Medical Psychotherapy Dual with General Adult and CBT This 5 year joint training in General Adult Psychiatry and Medical Psychotherapy is a small scheme (3 trainees). It has been designed to ensure that graduates from the scheme possess a highly desirable combination of skills for today's health service job market. The programme has capacity for 2 psychodynamic trainees and one CBT. Potential applicants should ensure the main modality they wish to apply for is that which is being advertised.
	Trainees spend the first two years with their main placement in General Adult Psychiatry and special interest time beginning their psychotherapy training. By the time trainees arrive at a main placement in psychotherapy (ST6), they are well-prepared to take good advantage of the training opportunities provided. There are formal academic courses that are integrated (CBT) or running in parallel (psychodynamic) and close clinical and educational supervision is provided throughout.
	The CBT training provides for experience in a primary care setting (ST6), within secondary care provision (ST7) and in a tertiary highly specialist service (the Newcastle CBT Centre; ST8). The psychodynamic training is set within the Regional Psychoanalytic psychotherapy service throughout. Research and the development of special interest in encouraged and there are excellent relationships across all psychiatric services in the region to support this. Experience in Family Therapy is provided within the Regional Eating Disorders service and alternative possibilities exist within the recently formed Centre for Specialised Psychotherapies
